Pete Crane

Born and raised in Honolulu, Hawaii, Pete Crane has spent 45 years making music and performing on stages across the country. His career began in the 1980s as bassist for the Hawaii metal band Sacred Rite, with whom he recorded three albums and toured extensively throughout the United States.

Over the years, he has continued to explore different sides of music, releasing several solo albums and developing a diverse career as a musician and performer. Most recently, he served as the front man for Solid Walls of Sound, a tribute production in which he brought the music, energy, and larger-than-life persona of Elton John to the stage.
